

IMEC (Marie Cobel) with "Friends"
September 6, 1985

Session 136: Spontaneous behavior

Original Question:

Subject of humour - joy and happiness and laughter - would not want to lose this when shifting into another reality. Basically, wanting to know if humour is experienced in the non-physical.

Summary:

Answer: That emotion is of the earth plane, it is a quality which is aspective. Your attachment to that action is aspective in that through that experience has been associated within your energies the feelings of pleasant as opposed to the expression of other feelings that have been labelled as negative. That expression is quite alright for individuals to participate in however that emotion as well as the emotion of fear or anger if it occurs spontaneously and automatically through aspective behaviour then it is not part of the consciousness of the individual that would be in control.

What is humorous to one is not necessarily humorous to another. Humour is often based on people's failures and idiosyncrasies, and you can find out a lot about yourself by observing what you find humorous and what is not.

If you find humour and joy in all that you perceive then you will have found that which you seek.

The qualities you see in others, you will find those same qualities in yourself.

Other comments: A large part of this session, does not make much sense. It seems to be all over the place and struggles to make a point.

Report by Antony McKechnie